

Apartment Sharing

Considering the expenses involved in having an apartment, you may want to get a roommate. However, selecting a roommate may not be as easy as you think. Don't assume that your best friend is the ideal person to live with.

What kind of person are you? Check one box on each row below that best describes you.

Are you someone who...

- |   |    |   |
|---|----|---|
| <input type="checkbox"/> Is neat                            | OR | <input type="checkbox"/> Is messy   |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Saves money                        |    | <input type="checkbox"/> Spends money                                     |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Gets up early                      |    | <input type="checkbox"/> Stays up late                                    |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Borrows from others                |    | <input type="checkbox"/> Doesn't like to borrow                           |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Is usually on time                 |    | <input type="checkbox"/> Is usually late                                  |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Likes loud music                   |    | <input type="checkbox"/> Like moderate music                              |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Can say "no" to friends            |    | <input type="checkbox"/> Has trouble saying "no"                          |
| <input type="checkbox"/> Likes to be around a lot of people |    | <input type="checkbox"/> Spends free time alone or with only a few people |

Use the space below to describe the kind of person that would make the best roommate for you. Remember that reliability is important. If your roommate doesn't pay his/her share of the expenses, you are left with an apartment you can't afford.